Few, comparatively, of the troops buow how to use their new guns properly, and fewer still have any idea of keeping them in good condition, At a recent review at Mingpo, a foreign observer noticed that the majority of the soldiers were unsupplied with ramrods to their old rifles, and had to shake in the charge by dropping the butte on the ground. So it is throughout. There is no complete. ness in their equipment; something has been neglected in every change made, will be a long time, we should imagine, before a really formidable Chinese army can be placed in the field. In former wars with England, the Chinese troops were almost without exception beneath contempt. a mob of undisciplined braves, mostly wanting in courage, and unable for a moment to fuce their foe, they were no mooner driven from behind their fortifications than they took to an ignominious flight.
